THREAT OF 'WET'

Violent cases open window on dangerous street drug mix

Federal investigators will begin testing strains of PCP to determine what role the hallucinogenic drug has played in a series of nightmarish attacks in Camden that have left one toddler decapitated, another young boy dead and his sister clinging to life.

by Camden Police Chief Scott Thomson comes after Osvaldo Rivera admitted smoking "wet," a combination of marijuana and PCP that can lead to violent outbursts, before slashing the throats of a 6-year-old boy and his 12-year-old sister on Sunday.

CAMDEN — The man charged with cutting the throats of a 6-year-old boy, killing him, and his 12-year-old sister in Camden while allegedly high on "wet" could soon be facing sexual assault charges in addition to murder and attempted murder.

Oswaldo Rivera, 31, faced no new charges as of his arraignment in Superior Court Tuesday. However, Assistant Prosecutor Christine Shuh stated in court that when police officers found the girl bleeding on the floor of her Ware Street home early Sunday morning, she told them "Poppy did it. Poppy raped me."

Shuh later explained that Rivera is known in the area by the nickname "Poppye."

IT'S THE BUSY TIME — Many showers didn't keep new and returning students from roaming Gloucester County College during the school's fall semester kick-off celebration Tuesday.

Students were scattered throughout college grounds the day before classes began to gather information, IDs, parking permits, and tour campus facilities.

More than that, students had valuable interactions with school staff, faculty and fellow students in between the entertainment, cookouts and giveaways.

"I think on days like this, everybody's upbeat. And it's a good time to make friends," said Nathan Anderson, sophomore member of the college's Student Government Association.

The group oversees other campus clubs and seeks to improve the quality of student life, according to Anderson.

Obama is one of us, first lady asserts

Michelle Obama said her husband has been able to live the American Dream

By Julie Price Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Michelle Obama's message: President Barack Obama is just like you.

"Barack knows the American Dream because he's lived it," the first lady told the Democratic National Convention on Tuesday in an address intended to reassure voters that her husband shares their values — hard work, perseverance and optimism — while also drawing a contrast between him and Mitt Romney.

WEATHER

Heavy storms, highs in the mid 80s, lows in the lower 70s.

DEMS: First lady touts Obama

(Continued from Page A-1) were tough, when they were "so in love, and so in debt." She reminisced about the man who now occupies the Oval Office pulling his favorite coffee table out of the trash and wearing dress shoes that were half a size too small. And she told stories about a president who still takes time to eat dinner with his daughters nearly every night, answering their questions about the news and strategizing about middle-school friendships.

With a mix of personal anecdotes and policy talk, Mrs. Obama's speech was her most political yet.

Today, after so many struggles and triumphs and moments that have tasted my husband in ways I never could have imagined, I have seen firsthand that being president doesn't change who you are — it reveals who you are," she said.

To that end, the first lady painted a portrait of a leader who knows the struggles of everyday Americans, who listens to them as president and who pushes an agenda with their interests in mind.

"That's the man I see in those quiet moments late at night, hunched over his desk, poring over the letters people have sent him," she said. "I see the concern in his eyes — and I hear the determination in his voice as he tells me, 'You won't believe what these folks are going through, Michelle. It's not right, we've got to keep working to fix this. We've got so much more to do.'

She added: "I see how that's what drives Barack Obama every single day."

With such stories, the first lady sought to counter Republicans trying to paint Obama as something other than a typical American, and implied that it was Romney who couldn't relate to people trying to get by in tough economic times.

To be sure, neither Romney nor Obama fits the bill of the average, working-class American struggling with credit card debt and mortgage payments. Both are millionaires who live a privileged life few Americans will ever experience.

But each candidate is trying to convince Americans that they're best suited to run an economy hampered by sluggish growth and high unemployment. Polls show Romney leading on who voters say would best to manage the economy; but Obama has the advantage on who voters believe understands their economic challenges better.

As she stood in the center of the convention's blue-carpeted stage, Mrs. Obama's words went straight to the core of the contrast Democrats are trying to draw between Obama and Romney. They say the president is pushing policies to boost the middle class, while Romney wants to protect the wealthy and hope their success trickles down.

Once a reluctant political spouse, Mrs. Obama delved more deeply into the details of her husband's policies than she has in her previous speeches. She promoted his health care overhaul, push for tax cuts for middle income earners and the auto bailout. And she took on the economy, her husband's biggest political liability, arguing that he "brought our economy back from the brink of collapse by creating jobs again."

"In the end, for Barack, these issues aren't political. They're personal," she said.

WET: Drug a danger on street

(Continued from Page A-1) preliminary tests showed a Camden woman who decapitated her 2-year-old son before killing herself had PCP in her system. They believe she had also smoked wet.

Thomson said the Drug Enforcement Administration investigators will help analyze batches of wet from Camden to see if it has been tampered with or if there is something chemically different about the drug now on the city's streets.

"We're not exactly certain what's causing that extreme to occur," Thomson said of the violence. "Hopefully, we will be able to make some sense of this completely amoral and sociopathic behavior."

Rivera, 31, appeared in court Tuesday, charged with killing Dominick Andujar and slashing the windpipe of the boy's sister. Rivera wept throughout the proceedings and seemed unaware of what he had done, asking police "How bad did I hurt them?" during his interrogation, prosecutors said.

Rivera, who did not enter a plea Tuesday, is charged with murder and attempted murder, but prosecutors said more charges will be filed. He remains at the Camden County Correctional Facility in lieu of $5 million.

Thomson said Dominick woke up during the attack and intervened, allowing his sister to flee the apartment.

Her 6-year-old brother was a hero," he said. The girl has also alleged Rivera sexually assaulted her, prosecutors said.

Special Agent Douglas Cellier, a DEA spokesman, said wet gives users an intense marijuana high coupled with the hallucinogenic effect of PCP. Police have said the high can last as little as six hours to as long as two days.

Cellier said abuse of the cocktail often has disastrous results. "Sometimes people just go berserk because of the chemical imbalance," he said.

In Essex County, officials have linked three homicides in the past year to wet, said Chief Assistant Prosecutor Thomas Fennelly, noting that the drug also goes by the names "dip" and "leek." In Newark, he said, users often dip marijuana cigarettes into embalming fluid, creating a similar intense high.

"It gives them a burst of adrenaline or extra strength, so for law enforcement officers who encounter that person, the fight is on, and it's a good one," Fennelly said.

While abuse of drugs like heroin and painkillers has exploded in recent years, abuse of wet isn't likely to see the same surge, police say. PCP isn't a popular drug in New Jersey and a dipped cigarette can cost up to $20, Fennelly said.

"It's a lot more expensive than some of the other street drugs out there," he said. "You normally don't see your heroin addict or people who have been doing drugs for years and years and years doing wet."

But what wet lacks in staying power, it makes up for in destructive behavior.

In addition to the two recent incidents, at least one other homicide in Camden has been linked to wet. Thomson said that in 2010, Earl Hanks killed his 18-month-old daughter, set his apartment ablaze then killed himself while high on the drug.

Northern New Jersey experienced a "mini-outbreak" of wet and PCP abuse in 2009 that included reports of crazed and violent behavior in Paterson, Jersey City and Newark, said Steven Marcus, a medical doctor and director of the state poison control center.

"People were acting out somewhat violently ... throwing themselves in front of cars, running down the street naked, requiring four and five people to hold them down in emergency rooms," he said.

Al Sacchetti, chief of emergency services at our Lady of Lourdes Medical Center in Camden, said doctors treat at least one or two people on PCP each day. But, Sacchetti said, PCP abusers rarely engage in extreme violence.

"Usually people hallucinate, but they're not that focused," Sacchetti said. "You have to be very focused in cut someone's head off or find someone and slit their throat."

GCC: College off to a quick start

"We try to make things around campus better for our students," Anderson said. "We do a lot around campus and we're trying to get new members. We like quantity, but we prefer quality."

Incoming first-year student Kelley Conto arrived on campus alone but had at least two new friends before the day's end.

"I'm just getting a feel for what it's like to be in college," said Conto, 22. "It's pretty interesting and it's a big space."

One of the young men Conto met was freshman Julian Bulskis of Monroe Township.

Bulskis, whose main goal is to "not fail," helped Conto get around campus after crossing paths during one of the campus tours.

At the college's Career and Academic Planning

(CAP) Center, traditional and non-traditional students trickled in and out to get a jump-start on choosing their professions.

"We help students at any given point and hope to point them in the right direction," said CAP Director John Ortiz.

According to Ortiz, many of the students he encounters tend to choose a major based on what they've heard of, rather than asking questions about what they aren't familiar with.

"Freshman students make choices on majors based on limited information," Ortiz said. "And the choices a student makes in the spring of 2012 may not be the same in spring of 2013. Every year, they mature intellectually."

The CAP center offers career assessment help and other resources to help students effectively navigate their career paths and also transfer to a four-year institution if they so choose.

GCC now has dual enrollment agreements with five other learning institutions, including Rowan University, Fairleigh Dickinson University, Rutgers University-Camden, Wilmington University, and the University of Maryland University College.

"Unfortunately the weather was a factor, but we still had quite a few students to come out," said GCC President Frederick Keating. "Our orientations have been redesigned to be far more informative. And I think it's a critical day to acclimate students with the college and become comfortable with the buildings and rooms."

Family, attorney reveal more about teen accused in Clayton arson

Relatives: She didn't like living there

Defense attorney Richard Josselson says the teen girl is very distraught (and very upset about what happened).

By Maryclaire Dale
Associated Press

WOODBURY — A 15-year-old girl charged with setting her home ablaze and trying to kill family members sleeping inside had moved back in with her mother only days before, relatives said Tuesday. The mother and stepfather, both corrections officers, wanted her to start 10th grade in rural Clayton, but she wanted to return to her father's house near Philadelphia, they said. "She doesn't like being in that house," said cousin Edna Chavez, 26, of Glassboro. Nonetheless, Chavez said she hadn't thought the tension amounted to much more than "typical teenage" behavior. About two dozen relatives from both sides of the family turned out for a juvenile detention hearing Tuesday to support the girl, whom they described as a favorite niece and good student. Some knew of the brewing dispute but were stunned to hear news (See ARSON, Page A-7)

Wallet to end 39-year odyssey

■ Bill Feeney of Westville lost it in Virginia in 1973; a family has had it since

By Joe Green
nj.com/south

For decades, George Evans held onto a strange inheritance. Every once on a while at his home in the Warrenton, Va., area, he'd take it out of the drawer in which it sat and try to track down its rightful owner.

It was a snapshot, you can say, of one Gloucester County man's life at a turbulent time.

But the man who'd carried it was nowhere to be found. And not much remained of the place in which he'd lost it.

Life on the base
In August 1972, during the waning days of U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War, Bill Feeney of Westville was drafted into the Army.

He wasn't deployed to Southeast Asia, but ended up at Vint Hill Farms Station (VHFS) near Warrenton. The facility served as an intelligence-gathering station during World War II, the Cold War and beyond. There he deciphered messages in Morse Code, he said, then typed them out for his superiors. ■ The governor will make several stops in South Jersey today as he signs bills and raises funds for the Republicans

By Carly Q. Romano
nj.com/south

Republicans in the nation and state are vying for Gov. Chris Christie's time, as he polishes his speech for the Republican National Convention next week.

But today, South Jersey's got him. Christie's public road trip through South Jersey kicks off in Camden, where he is expected to sign the bill completing the merger of Rowan and Rutgers universities. Then, the governor will be whisked off to Salem County for a late afternoon town hall meeting.

It's the closed events on Christie's South Jersey tour, however, that have area Republicans revved up, and with good reason. It's not easy to nab time with a governor who's building a national audience and is in high demand by New Jersey's Republican committees.

Gloucester and Cumberland county executive committees — which will host Christie at fundraisers tonight — started wooing the state's top-ranking Republican months ago. Bill Fey, Gloucester County's former GOP executive committee chairman, got the ball rolling as early as February.

ATHLETE FEATURE: KRISTINA MORGAN

NO OBSTACLE TOO GREAT

Kristina Morgan was on top of the world. The Gloucester (N.J.) softball pitcher was still glowing from leading the Roadrunners to their first national championship in 2011 and was eagerly preparing for a repeat. Just when everything seemed to be going right for the promising young star, an inconceivable accident instantly changed her life.

On Dec. 24, 2011, Morgan awoke to a typical Christmas Eve day in New Jersey. She woke up, got dressed and went to work at a local surf and ski shop. Morgan was taking down a sign when the life-altering event took place.

"While I was taking the ladder down, I had to unhook it from the wall with a bungee cord," Morgan said. "The bungee cord snapped back out of my hand from the tension and hit me directly in the eye. From there, they took me to the hospital and I was told there was a lot of internal damage. All I was thinking about was if this meant I couldn't play softball."

"The first thing that went through my mind was if she was going to be alright for life," said Gloucester softball head coach Steve DePasquale. "Her mom called me and wanted me to know. I think her mom knew what I would do for softball but how I was really worried about the kids and their future."

Morgan was transferred to one of the top eye care centers in the country where she would endure over two weeks of tests and treatment. In order to remove gel inside the eye from the detached retina, doctors performed a vitrectomy. The procedure was successful but Morgan's optic nerve was damaged as well. Morgan would never again regain sight in her right eye.

"They told me I would never be able to play contact sports again," Morgan said.

After returning home, Morgan began the enduring road to recovery. Even the most elementary of tasks became strenuous and in some cases, impossible.

"For a while I wasn't allowed to do much of anything," Morgan said. "I wasn't even allowed to bend over to tie my shoes. It was a lot longer process than I was used to. If you break your finger, they just put you in a cast and send you on your way."

DePasquale did his best to encourage Morgan during her recovery but was well aware that he would never be able to know what she was going through. DePasquale put Morgan in contact with Peggy Anne Coker, a local girl that experienced an accident remarkably similar to Morgan's.

"She was in her senior year of high school when she got hit in the eye with a golf club," Morgan said. "We basically went through the same thing. She really motivated me to not give up and to keep striving for what I know. She explained to me that as an athlete, you're still going to have the muscle memory. That motivated me because I realized that it wasn't going to be my eye that held me back but it'd be myself mentally."

Morgan motivated herself all the way to recovery and was cleared by doctors to return to softball two days before the season-opener. Although she was unable to play, Morgan gave her teammates an inspirational speech featuring a quote from the legendary Green Bay Packers head coach, Vince Lombardi.

It read: "The measure of who we are is what we do with what we have."

From the start of the 2012 season, Morgan served as a pillar of inspiration for the Roadrunners in their quest for back-to-back national championships.

"She made a huge impact right away," DePasquale said. "From the day she was released, she went right to work on finding out how she would be able to play."

Despite the horrific accident that she suffered, Morgan was still able to continue her dominance on the mound and actually improved in some areas. Morgan dropped the 1.43 ERA that she compiled her freshman season to 1.13 in 2012 – ranking fifth in Division III. Morgan also tallied 117 strikeouts and boasted an 18-3 record on the season.

"I was hoping that she would be able to get back out on the field. I doubted when I heard about the injury that she would be able to return to pitching.

I thought maybe we'd get her back in the outfield and she'd get some swings. I thought she might struggle at that but she refused to struggle at the plate, on the mound or anywhere else."

Morgan completed her goal of spearheading Gloucester to another national title. Morgan gave up only 23 earned runs in 142.1 innings of work, while batting .245 with 18 RBIs in 2012. Capping off her masterful season with a shutout of Anne Arundel CC (Md.) in the national championship game, Morgan was named Tournament MVP and Most Outstanding Pitcher of the Tournament.

"Last year was so different because it was the first time Gloucester had ever even made it to the national tournament," Morgan said. "This year was more about me proving to myself and everyone else that I could do it again and that I wouldn't let an injury get in my way."

Off the diamond, Morgan faced the difficult task of maintaining her exemplary academic record. Having made the President's List in each of her first three semesters, Morgan was confronted by a challenging schedule of math and science courses. Responding with the same perseverance that she displayed in softball, Morgan once again made the President's List – this time with a 4.0 grade-point average.

"At first, I was really worried because it was hard to read – especially from a computer screen," Morgan said. "I also had a lot of hybrid classes that required online reading. It was difficult but I was able to push past it."

Morgan completed her fourth semester with an overall 3.86 grade-point average and is one class away from earning an Associate degree in Equine Science. Morgan was also a member of the Mu Theta Alpha mathematics honor society and the Phi Theta Kappa international honor society.

The story of Kristina Morgan is one that student-athletes, professional athletes and anyone who has faced a trial in their life should take note of. Faced with a life-changing disability and the threat of never playing softball again, Morgan withstood the adversity and came back stronger for it.

"Nothing can really hold you back," Morgan said. "You just have to keep pushing forward. My injury was just a bump in the road and part of life. When something knocks you down, you just have to get back up and keep going."

Re: Purchase, Delivery and Installation of Smart Classroom Equipment

Dear Vice President Burzichelli:

I have reviewed the bid specifications and the bids for the above-referenced project for legal compliance only. We understand staff has reviewed the bid for technical compliance. The bid of Open Systems Integrators, Inc. is the low bid under both options, i.e., with installation or without installation and is compliant in all material, non-waivable respects. Accordingly, I have no objection to an award of the contract to Open Systems Integrators, Inc. Please note that Open Systems Integrators, Inc. has submitted alternate bids. One option is for expedited delivery in 2-3 weeks at $72,744 installed and $57,099 for equipment without installation. The second option is for delivery within 60 days as provided for in the specifications at $71,743 installed and $57,099 for equipment without installation. Please make sure the resolution is specific as to the dollar amount of the award to make it clear which option is being awarded. Please also insure that the contract references the bid specifications and the addendum. We will be happy to review same if you wish.

If you need anything further, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Very truly yours,

ANGELINI, VINIAR & FREEDMAN, LLP
